

Katie works as research coordinator for Brinkman & Associates, having come into the position after 9 seasons as a treeplanter and foreman across Canada. Katie holds an MA in Disaster and Emergency Management from York University, and a BA in International Development and History from Dalhousie University. Her research focus through both degrees included vulnerability theory, international disaster relief, sustainable development, and strategic human resources planning for emergencies. Throughout her Masters degree she worked for the City of Kingston in the Emergency Management Department specializing in Emergency Planning for Vulnerable Populations. She is a volunteer with the Canadian Red Cross and worked as project manager for a grass roots tsunami relief project in Ban Nam Khem, Thailand following the 2004 Tsunami.
